The title of this book, "the half-life of facts" says that everything we know has an expiration date. However, this is misleading and what is really happening is improved accuracy of measurement for many of the author's "gotcha" examples. For example, the elevation of Mount Everest changes over time due to improved measurement accuracy (use of GPS vs. terrestrial surveying) and the recognition that plate tectonics is causing the mountain to rise with time. Other "facts" discussed such as ...
